AMERICAN FAMILIES MOVE OUTDOORS

No longer is the home life of the modern American Family limited to the space within the house. A new vogue for living out-of-doors has taken hold—the home of today now extends to the boundaries of the property and embraces the entire grounds as well as the house. To make it possible to know these new delights of modern living, the grounds must be planted and furnished to make them as inviting and pleasant for gracious living out-of-doors as well as indoors.

That portion of the grounds set aside for the private use of the family must of necessity be screened from the view of the passers-by with living walls of pleasing foliage and flowers. Comfort for the afternoon guests is not possible without trees to offer welcome shade in just the right spot. A garden to be completely enjoyed must have a vantage spot where one may comfortably sit and view it. Hence the practical need for a shelter which, if attractively designed, will enhance the beauty of the picture. A paved terrace where chairs and table may be placed, a lawn bench where one may sit and enjoy a pleasing view, will make the outdoor living room inviting and comfortable.

Surely in the outdoor room one expects to find gayety and color, for certainly there is no other opportunity so wonderful as this to try one's hand at decoration. With no limit of material to work with there can be bright ribbons of flowering bulbs to enliven the scene in early spring and a gay procession of hardy flowers to follow until the Frost King provides a final climax with a galaxy of resplendent autumn hues.

Will your grounds be ready this summer for gracious outdoor living? If not you will find this a most excellent time to plan the necessary changes.
Selecting Hardy Plants and Flowers

It is possible to have some show of color in every portion of the garden at anytime, with perennials.

In planting the hardy border the taller growing sorts should be placed in the background; a few of these are Boltonias, Cassia, Hollyhocks, Golden-glow, Mallow, Sunflowers, etc. The front of the border should be laid out in the dwarf growing type, the intermediate rows will take care of the great majority of perennials; the principal requirement is their location, being so disposed that colors will not clash or be unequally distributed, variation in the blooming season must also be considered in order not to have some sections of the garden without some show of color at anytime.

Planting—The roots may be planted as early in spring as the ground is pliable, soil not to be wet or soggy. Large clumps are not necessary, the smaller divisions or pot grown stock often showing more thrift and developing into shaplier plants than the old roots.

Any soil moderately enriched with rotted manure, bone meal or sheep manure, dug deep and thoroughly mixed will be satisfactory.

Spacing—In planting perennials, varieties that do not grow above 2 feet may be planted about 12 inches apart. Taller ones at an interval one half the ultimate height. Crowding or stingy planting to be avoided for perfect effect and healthy growth.

Cultivation—Keep the soil well cultivated free from weeds and litter, except during drought and mulch of grass (lawn sweepings) will help retain moisture and keep the soil from baking.

Training—Staking at an early date will adjust later defects and will overcome the tied up appearance of the plant that has been allowed to develop before given support.

Tidiness—It is a necessity to have an attractive garden, removing dead flowers, withered leaves, broken twigs, etc., will well repay the time and attention given.

Dividing—the early flowering types are generally dwarf and close rooted, these do not need to be disturbed for several years. The tall sorts of later summer and fall are fast growing, for general appearance and quality of bloom these should be taken up, divided, and a part only replanted at least every second year.

Winter Protection—It will be necessary to protect some of the less hardy plants in the border. Not all of them require it, Iris, Phlox, Peonies and Oriental Poppies withstand severe winters without protection. A light covering of straw, stable manure or leaves will protect the less hardy plants, after removing all stems and dead foliage during the last days of November or before severe cold weather sets in, apply this dressing, removing it gradually in the spring as the frost begins to leave the ground.
Hardy Perennial Flowers

The interest in gardening has vastly increased in late years, the hardy perennial herbaceous plants are coming into their own. The "Old Fashioned Garden" reminiscent of "Grandmother" and her times has been a commercial slogan and a garden fad for the past decade. Plant producers have enriched the available lists of material by incursions into other climes and distant lands seeking rare and unknown species and improving those types already known.

Through careful study the nurseries have learned to provide groups of plants for hot and dry locations, a different collection for shade and dampness, providing a variety of edging subjects so that artistically balanced color and blooming season in any location may be had. Many "back yards" have been changed from a place for storing rubbish into a place of beauty by planting hardy perennials. Planting can be started in spring or fall.

ROCK GARDENS

Suggestions for Building

A charming Rock Garden, like happiness, may be waiting you in your own back yard. The Rockery maybe large or ever so small. If you have a spot only 6 by 8 feet, you can convert it into a miniature Rock Garden of real beauty. In building a Rock Garden location is first to be considered, then materials for the size Rockery you have planned.

Regardless of what type Rock Garden is to be built the top soil must be dug in preparing the site, this soil should be sifted and later used as a back fill.

Drainage is so important in making a Rock Garden that it should be considered before any of the rock are laid. For ordinary drainage conditions several inches of coarse gravel, stove or coal ashes placed about 18 inches below the surface of the garden space will take care of the excess water.

The stones selected should never be all the same size, no matter what type of garden or kind of rock is used. As the stones are placed each one should be embedded so firmly that its own weight will hold it in position; if any of the stone, after being placed, seems to slide or wobble when stepped on, it should be reset. Construction work should be carefully done in the beginning for it is difficult to repair a Rock Garden. In placing the stone they should be set with a slight slope toward the rear so that the water will run in toward the plant roots. Stones have the characteristic of equalizing the temperature of the soil, keeping it cooler by day and warmer by night.

Soil in a Rock Garden may range from sand and gravel with no humus in it to rich, highly acid leaf mold, the soil should be fitted to the type plants one has planned to use. For most Rock Gardens and for most situations a loamy soil will meet the general needs.

Plants suitable for the Rockery are almost unlimited. Where space permits a few dwarf evergreens planted about. There are also flowering shrubs of dwarf habit that make a pretty contrast to the blooming plants.

We have a large variety of strong field grown plants in stock that will give immediate result, and can append the following list as being adapted for rock gardening.

GROWING GIFTS

In buying gifts do you include plants on the list? Plants are ideal presents because with proper care they last a long while, bringing happiness to the shut-in and add a bright touch of color to the house. Among the many blooming plants for the house, the Primrose, Cyclamen and Begonias are outstanding because they require only an ordinary amount of care.

Primroses are dainty and beautiful, there is no other blooming plant as adaptable for house culture as these. There are many varieties—each one a free and constant bloomer.

The Chinese Varieties are double, semi-double and single, ranging in color from white to dark crimson.

There are a few simple rules in caring for the Primrose for best results. It should never be planted deep, that is, with the crown below the level of the soil in the pot, for when the plant is watered the water will collect there and remain too long for the good of the plant, this will cause decay. Therefore when potting slope the soil toward the outside of the pot rather than toward the crown of the plant. Never place young plants in large pots, or transplant a Primrose unless you are sure the soil is full of roots. The reason for this is, the Primrose should not have many nor large roots, if placed in a large pot of soil it receives more nutritive elements than it can assimilate.

Never shower this plant, as the foliage is apt to be injured if drops of water are allowed to stand on them.

The Begonia has been growing in popularity in the last few years, due to its dependability, easy culture and has no insect enemies.

The blooming varieties demand sunshine while the others do best in shade, unless cut back at intervals all varieties will become tall and ungainly, pinching out the top of the shoots will cause the plant to grow compact and bushy.

If the plant drops its leaves, it can usually be attributed to too much or too little water. Not enough or too much sun, or too little fresh air. When a Begonia rots off at the roots it is usually a case of too much water. As a rule, in a warm room, a plant will do best in a light soil composed of good loam and leafmold.

The Cyclamen is another house plant that is just a bit different and cannot be surpassed in loveliness. All it requires is a little intelligent care to remain in bloom throughout the winter.

The soil about the roots must be kept quite damp, if the soil is allowed to become dry the flowers will begin to droop. Growing in its native state in low marshy places, it is used to a great deal of shade. While it demands light it abhors strong sunlight. Water it once a day, but do not permit water to collect on the foliage or about the heart of the plant, if it does the stems will start to decay.

NOTE: The prices contained in this catalogue are for strong plants of blooming age but do not apply to Special Landscape sizes selected by the customer on the grounds. Prices for same will be established according to size and value. However they will always be reasonable.
